I have an existing class in my Project which has annotation @Service Is this annotation needed if I am adding new @Service annotated dependency to this class. A: Is this annotation needed if I am adding new @Service annotated dependency to this class. You should always add a @Service if you're adding new dependencies to your class. In my opinion, it's not the annotation that has to be there, it's the annotation-driven programming. Saving the Bison After a 50-year struggle, Yellowstone's bison have been saved. Now begins an era of painful steps toward the reestablishment of the iconic animal. From the moment I arrived in Montana, having seen Saving Private Ryan, I knew I had come to the end of the road: It was here, at the edge of the Yellowstone Basin, the last place on earth where bison were still wild and free. But it was not the end of the road for me; rather, it was the beginning of a long journey to right an ancient wrong. At the edge of the basin, an unimpeded view of the land rolled into vast blue-gray mountains. Below was water that was a little less water and more air. On the other side were fields and farms, with occasional houses. The road was rough, the land was harsh. For buffalo and human alike, all but the most tenuous niches in these hills and plains had been lost for long and were not about to be regained. I took off my pack and walked. Nothing but streams and hills, and herds of buffalo and antelope, splashing across the land, or loping along in hues of buff, alabaster, and bronze. Only occasionally did I come across a dog or coyote. Everywhere was silence. I was alone in the heart of Yellowstone, not thinking of what would happen to the buffalo; thinking only that they were still free, in the place where they belonged. In a way, of course, I was wrong: The buffalo had never been truly free. They belonged to the Pish-Tuh; the Creator. While the rest of us were free to live on this land as we pleased, there were those who had no f678ea9f9e
